

Biosecurity spotlight

When it comes to breeder farm or hatchery biosecurity there can be numerous weak links. In this photo feature we highlight some of the problem areas that may need attention.

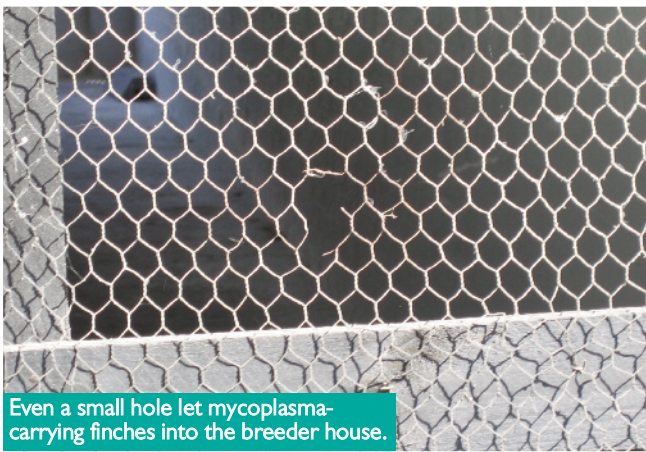

There is no point having a fence if animals can come under it!

Feral or backyard chickens are a health liability.

Water leaks attract insects, wild birds and vermin.

Even a small hole let mycoplasma-carrying finches into the breeder house.

Doors should be close fitting.

Wild birds should be discouraged from nesting in breeder houses!

Drainage holes which are not properly sealed are an entry point for vermin.
